Blended learning: A Revolutionary Changein the Era of Digital Education, the New Normal Amrita Mukheriee

Abstract :

ICT or the new age technology changed the way of acquiring knowledge, as it makes education more accessible to all. Education has undergone a revolutionary change and that gives birth to a new-age blended mode of learning. As per the UNESCO website report, over 190 countries faced disruption in the traditional learning process that impacted nearly 1.5 billion learners at the same time. As per the same report, about 320 million learners face the same problem in India alone. ICT-based blended learning is an innovative approach that combines traditional and ICTsupported learning, including both offline and online learning. It also provided the scope for collaborative learning and CAI (computer-assisted learning). The practical implementation of blended learning needs rigorous efforts, a proper attitude, highly motivated and well-trained instructors, and active students for success. It is a difficult task to organize and implement, as blended learning provides a diverse outlook and breaks the traditional methods of learning. In the Indian educational system, the scope and usage of active blended learning are still far to achieve. As covid 19 forced the requirements of social distancing, its outcome hits very badly especially in the education sector, as teachers and students faced diverse challenges, tocontinue quality education gives the rise to the e-learning virtual classroom of ICT based learning. Blended learning not only improves the quality of
